

Work in Crisis

A Leadership Workshop for Workforce Development

Since 1947, Coro has been equipping people with skills, knowledge, and networks to drive innovative solutions. In this time of workforce disruption, Coro will present an interactive leadership workshop to prepare those in the workforce development field to envision and plan solutions during a crisis.

What is Coro?

Coro's mission is to prepare individuals for effective and ethical leadership. Coro believes that California needs a community of leaders who can engage in systems thinking and possess the ability to collaborate with other innovators across sectors, perspectives, and backgrounds. To accomplish that vision, Coro's programs blend experiential, classroom, and cohort-based learning to develop key leadership competencies.

"Covid-19 is disrupting work and supports for the unemployed in unimaginable ways. I am excited to work with Coro to help bring new skills for leaders in the public workforce system. We need to invest in our own leadership capacity in order to respond to this crisis."

~ Virginia Hamilton
Former U.S. Department of Labor
Regional Administrator

What is Work in Crisis - A Leadership Workshop for Workforce Development?

Work in Crisis is a highly participatory session designed for emerging and established professionals in the space of workforce development. This workshop will bring workforce professionals from across California together to engage in a collaborative environment to grow their leadership toolkit in this and other periods of uncertainty and crisis.

Participants will learn from Coro facilitators, workforce development expert and U.S. Department of Labor Regional Administrator from 2012 to 2017 Virginia Hamilton, and each other over the course of 90 minutes of facilitated exploration and small group breakout discovery. Topics to be covered include effective inquiry to diagnose situations and challenges and an introduction to adaptive leadership frameworks.
